

MR. GARVEY ON TRIAL. ANGRY HETTY GREEN.

The "Aster Tramp" Fed by a Mysterious Wealthy Woman.

Club Gossips Say He Was on a Still
Hunt for Certain Documents.

His Case Adjourned Over Until Next Monday.

More than an ordinary public interest was manifested in the case of John Garvey, the "Aster tramp," when his trial was called before Justice Fitzgerald in Part II. of the General Sessions this forenoon.

Since Garvey has been locked up he has been faring remarkably well in the food line. All his meals have been sent from a neighboring restaurant and have been paid for by Mr. Stanton, declared by a wealthy woman, whose identity the lawyer refused to disclose. He would only say that the woman was not one of the "angels" who are in the habit of attending to the wants of prisoners.

Ever since it was shown that Garvey was to be prosecuted to the uttermost limit of the law by John Jacob Astor, the club gossips have been wagging their tongues in a new version of the thing.

Now it is said that John Garvey is not the sordid specimen of the genus tramp that he appears. On the contrary, there is a well-founded suspicion that he is a very knowing gentleman, who, if he had succeeded in getting certain information which could only be obtained by a short sojourn in the Astor household, would be beginning to live and dress like other people.

On Monday Mrs. Green and her daughter called at the St. George Hotel, where they had a private interview with Capt. Turnbull, the proprietor. She said she had been hounded by newspaper reporters and wished in future to travel incognito. Capt. Turnbull explained that it would be necessary for Mrs. Green to register so she wrote her name upon the clerk's book as Mrs. Gray. She was assigned to the cheapest suit of rooms in the hotel.

When she arrived neither Mrs. Green nor her daughter had a trunk. Their clothes were in a few boxes, and two portmanteaus which they carried.

None of the guests at the hotel suspected that the tall, angular-looking woman was Hetty Green. Mrs. Green and her daughter were the first to arrive in the dining-room, and so attracted little or no attention. During her stay at the hotel Mrs. Green had no callers nor did she receive any letters. She might have lived there indefinitely under the name of Mrs. Gray had not the matter leaked out yesterday. When the evening edition of the "World" was published, the plan of former jeopardy would be good. It cannot, however, be claimed in this case that the Astor residence was a public place, as defined by the section relating to disorderly conduct. Breach of this house is not disorderly conduct, and cannot be so construed. I therefore directed the jury to find in favor of the prisoner's plea.

Justice Fitzgerald was evidently provoked at Mr. Macdonald's action, but there was no other way to put the case over until Monday, which was done. Justice Fitzgerald said that the case was allowed to give his testimony, showing Garvey's conduct, and that it will be read on Monday.

Justice Fitzgerald read the section of the law which defines disorderly conduct, and then said:

The issue is one of law only. The test is this: If the act charged in the indictment could be tried under the former proceeding, the plea of former jeopardy would be good. It cannot, however, be claimed in this case that the Astor residence was a public place, as defined by the section relating to disorderly conduct. Breach of this house is not disorderly conduct, and cannot be so construed. I therefore directed the jury to find in favor of the prisoner's plea.
